Alex Joehl

Alex Joehl is a name you may recognize. He ran for the Mayor's seat in 2018 in the Township of Langley and has run under the Libertarian banner provincially and federally.

Alex now turns his attention to the vacant School Trustee position.

While goals of reforming the tax code, legalizing healthcare, and ending foreign interventions take a backseat at this level of governance, the thing he admires about the role as School Trustee is the ability to help reshape the way our youth can access education.

When students and their parents are given the opportunity to choose their own learning paths they flourish.

We don't need participation ribbons for students. We need students to want to participate.

Alex isn't a teacher or school administrator, but enjoys helping kids develop life lessons through sports. Prior to government lockdowns on activities you'd find him coaching local roller and ball hockey.

Still, he does have a skin in the game - His son is halfway through the K-12 journey. And we all have experiences from our own schooling that help us develop new ways of attacking education.

Currently, he works as a Meat Department Manager at a major grocery store and is a former sports writer with a Bachelor of Applied Journalism from Kwantlen University College and a Diploma in Journalism from Langara College.
