Be Greenspired at Langley Centennial Museum

Langley, BC – Visit Langley Centennial Museum from February 19 to May 21, 2022 to view our newest exhibit Green Art: Sharing Sustainable Approaches and Practices. You will be greenspired to reduce, reuse, and repurpose household and workplace items after experiencing the works created by people from across our region. Each piece on display was developed with at least 75% green or repurposed materials.

“We had an amazing response from sustainably-minded community members,” said Lindsay Foreman, Curator of Indigenous Arts and Culture and exhibition lead. “126 unique works from contributors living across the lands known today as BC were reviewed by the adjudication committee.”

The pieces selected for the Green Art exhibit have been arranged by their primary material to raise awareness about the different types of consumer waste. This approach also demonstrates how different people are reusing and repurposing similar materials to create sustainable art.

View the exhibit to be greenspired, and find creative ways to reuse, and reduce waste every day.

This project is funded by the BC Arts Council.
